RADIOACTIVE MATERIAL

Iraq is searching for "highly dangerous" radioactive material stolen last year, according to an environment ministry document and seven security, environmental and provincial officials who fear it could be used as a weapon if acquired by the Islamic State. The material, stored in a protective case the size of a laptop computer, went missing in November from a storage facility near the southern city of Basra. REUTERS

OSCAR GIFT BAG LAWSUIT

2 In a federal lawsuit filed in Los Angeles, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences accused Distinctive Assets of promoting its gift bags as official Oscars swag. "Distinctive Assets uses the Academy's trademarks to raise the profile of its 'gift bags' and falsely create the impression of association, affiliation, connection, sponsorship and/or endorsement," said the lawsuit, which names the company's founder, Lash Fary, as a defendant. REUTERS

DEAD BODY DUMPED

4 Bensalem police have charged a homeless man with the roadside dumping of a woman's body after she suffered a fatal drug overdose. Stephanie Machen, 25, from Norristown was found Tuesday morning along Mill Road after authorities said she died from an overdose in Philadelphia, Bensalem police reported. Police said Erik Finnegan, who has no fixed address, drove her body to Mill Road and discarded it onto the shoulder of the roadway. MATT LEE

'THE WIRE' GANGSTER

5 The onetime Baltimore gangster who inspired characters on the critically acclaimed HBO series "The Wire" has died in a federal medical prison in North Carolina, officials said Wednesday. Nathan Barksdale, 54, died Saturday in the Federal Medical Center in Butner, North Carolina, spokesman Greg Norton said. "He had been ill, so it was not unexpected," Norton said, without giving a cause of death. Barksdale had been serving a four-year sentence for drug crimes. REUTERS

GUILTY MURDER PLEA

6 The man charged with the 2014 killing of the father of a Brooklyn Nets player in Philadelphia has pleaded guilty, ABC Philly reported. Carl White reportedly pleaded guilty shortly after a jury had been selected for his trial. He has been sentenced to 30 to 60 years in prison. Wayne Ellington Sr., the father of Brooklyn Nets player Wayne Ellington, was found on the evening of Nov. 9, 2014, in his crashed Oldsmobile and with a gunshot wound to his head. MATT LEE

Philly-area priest gets 20 years for child porn

A Catholic priest from the Philadelphia area who pleaded guilty to child porn charges last year was sentenced to 20 years in prison Wednesday.

Mark John Haynes, 56, a former priest at Sts. Simon and Jude Church in West Chester, Pennsylvania, was arrested after federal investigators tracked child porn to a church computer — which he later destroyed in an attempt to conceal evidence.

He got two decades in prison after pleading guilty to child porn, destruction of evidence and using the Internet to entice a minor to engage in sexual conduct.

In 2010, Haynes created accounts for an imaginary 15-year-old-girl named Katie on social media platforms including Facebook, Instagram and dating sites.

Haynes used this fake identity to "meet young teenage girls online, engage in sexual chats, and send them child pornography photos and videos in an attempt to entice them to take and send sexually explicit pictures of themselves," prosecutors said — possibly communicating with as many as 25 minors.

Prosecutors located one victim, a 13-year-old girl, who confirmed that she was convinced to send "Katie" 10 videos of herself masturbating.

Haynes was also convicted of destroying his computer while out on bail after being arrested in 2014.

"Haynes duped an 86-year-old friend of his mother into retrieving his computer from his apartment at the rectory at Sts. Simon and Jude's," federal prosecutors said in a statement. "Haynes then destroyed the computer, discarding the hard drive in a dumpster in New Jersey."

The scaffolding is seen on top of neighbors' cars in Fairmount. ERIKA STUDDER

Scaffolding owners cited for damages

The specifics of the collapse remain unclear.

SAM NEWHOUSE
@scnewhouse
sam.newhouse@metro.us

City officials confirmed Wednesday that they cited the owners of a Fairmount property whose construction scaffolding tipped into the street Tuesday, damaging nearby cars.

No injuries were reported in the incident at 25th and Parrish streets. But two municipal vehicles were crushed and an unspecified number of private cars were damaged.

"The scaffolding was taken down entirely after the collapse yesterday," city Licenses & Inspections spokeswoman Karen Guss said via email.

The scaffolding was adjacent to a building belonging to Waynmore Associates in Cheltenham, Pennsylvania. No one from the company responded to repeated requests for comment from Metro.

The company was cited with violations for having an unlicensed contractor, no permit for the work, no proof of insurance and for putting scaffolding up on a wall with loose bricks, Guss said.

"The property owner is now responsible for having a licensed, insured contractor repair the wall and bring it up to code," Guss said via email. "The proper permits for the work must be obtained. If scaffolding is put up, the proper permits include a permit for the scaffolding itself and a permit authorizing the sidewalk closure necessary for the scaffold. L&I inspectors will monitor the progress of the required work."

Those around the area of the collapse Wednesday were spooked by the accident.

"God forbid, it could have been a disaster," said Frank Mendell, who works in the area. "Whoever put up the scaffold, it was so tall they figured the weight would hold it, but the wind got behind the tarp. The wind was strong and pushed it right over."

Tacony's first new bakery in 20 years

Rebecca Rogers and her husband Terry have opened a new bakery called Puddin's Cake Corner. CHARLES MOSTOLLER

Rebecca Rogers is helping bring a bit of sweetness back to a neighborhood long ignored by small business.

JENNY DEHUFF
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

Rebecca Rogers baked her first cake for her father in her Northeast Philly kitchen almost a decade ago.

A self-taught contriver of confection, she now owns Puddin's Cake Corner in Tacony, the first of its kind for the fledgling neighborhood in more than 20 years.

Rogers and Puddin's recently celebrated a ribbon-cutting, and she told Metro she's happy to see development in an area that's gotten little attention over the years in terms of business — small business — at the very least.

"I did it with the intention of having a showroom for my specialty cakes — to offer different flavors and stuff. But it's definitely different from any kind of bakery I've ever seen," said Rogers.

"We do odd, trendy things. Today we had bacon-loaded sticky buns. Wednesday is bacon day. We had bacon-topped cupcakes," she said.

"There's such a high demand for quality pastries, and I feel people in this

"It doesn't get better than having a homegrown Tacony resident opening up a local Tacony business."

neighborhood are looking for hope that things are going to get better. The hood has been struggling for a while."

Rogers said she's seen an enormous outpouring of support from the entire neighborhood, including members of the Tacony Civic Association and the city councilman who represents the district, Bobby Henon.

Henon praised the work of those who will be taking advantage of the city's new storefront improvement program, which invests in commercial corridors by installing new streetlights, sidewalks, resurfaced streets, and other commodities.

"Tacony is an emerging neighborhood," said Henon.

"In the form of new businesses, we have a new coffee shop in the neighborhood, and a bakery is just what was missing. It doesn't get better than having a homegrown Tacony resident opening up a local Tacony business. We couldn't be happier."

Before Puddin's existed, the space within the building on the 4800 block of Princeton Avenue was an empty shell owned by Joe Sanutti, who also owns a funeral home at the other end of the block.

Rogers said Puddin's offers a cake shop/dessert bar/coffee house all in one, where customers can come in, sit down and dine in, if they like. Average birthday and christening cakes start in the $25 to $35 range. Specialty and wedding cakes range from $225 to $1,000. There's even a fireplace if folks want to stay a while.

Rogers said, "Everyone keeps saying, 'You're bringing the neighborhood back.'"

Philly detective charged with crippling man

A Special Victims Unit detective is charged with allegedly attacking a man and leaving him abandoned and unable to walk.

SAM NEWHOUSE
@scnewhouse
sam.newhouse@metro.us

A Philly cop turned himself in Wednesday to face charges of aggravated assault and kidnapping for allegedly beating a man outside a police station last year, the District Attorney's office announced.

Det. Adam O'Donnell, 43, a nine-year veteran of the force, allegedly attacked 45-year-old Theodore Life Jr. after escorting him out of the police department's Special Victims Unit where O'Donnell was assigned.

Prosecutors alleged O'Donnell delivered a crippling blow to Life's knee, then drove him off to a random street and left him there.

Police Commissioner Richard Ross suspended O'Donnell for 30 days with intent to dismiss, the police department announced Wednesday.

O'Donnell's motive or the circumstances of what the two men were doing at the time were not described in the announcement of charges from the office of DA Seth Williams.

"Mr. Life was there for an investigation," Williams' spokesman, Cameron Kline, said. Kline declined to comment further.

Life has a rap sheet dating back to 1991, including arrests for burglary, terroristic threats and assault, the last of which he pleaded guilty to in 2001 and got a year in prison. His Twitter account lists his occupation as a record producer, musician, music publisher, writer and artist.

At the time in question, O'Donnell was escorting police vehicle and drove him to the Hunting Park section of the city, where he dropped the injured Mr. Life off on a random roadside."

Det. Adam O'Donnell PHO

Life was unable to walk, but called his father, who found him and brought him to a hospital where he was treated for a non-displaced femur fracture.

Life is still undergoing treatment and walking with a limp, according to the DA's office.

"A senseless attack on one Philadelphian is an attack on all Philadelphians," Williams said in a statement. "I also hope that by charging Mr. O'Donnell he not only understands the severity of his crime but is reminded that when law enforcement does something to clearly hurt a complainant, it will not be tolerated and will be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law."

In addition to assault and kidnapping felony charges, O'Donnell was charged with misdemeanor simple assault, unlawful restraint, obstructing administration of law and official oppression.

O'Donnell made headlines after he was shot in the chest during a shootout with a suspect who ran through a red light while fleeing an earlier shooting. That suspect was slain by O'Donnell and his partner.

"A senseless attack on one Philadelphian is an attack on all Philadelphians."

Williams

Life Jr. out of a police station when he stepped outside of the view of security cameras, Williams' office said.

"Det. O'Donnell grabbed Mr. Life and kicked him once in the knee," a press release from Williams stated. "After falling to the ground in pain, Life regained his composure and found that he could stand but could not put any weight on his leg. Det. O'Donnell then put Mr. Life in an unmarked

Privacy versus law enforcement debate

The ruling was a topic of discussion on the presidential campaign trail on Wednesday.

A court order demanding that Apple Inc. help the U.S. government unlock the encrypted iPhone of one of the San Bernardino shooters opens a new chapter in the legal, political and technological fight pitting law enforcement against civil liberties advocates and major tech companies.

The government argues that the phone is a crucial piece of evidence in investigating one of the worst attacks in the United States by people who sympathized with Islamist militants. But privacy groups warn that forcing companies to crack their own encryption endangers the technical integrity of the Internet and threatens not just the privacy of customers but potentially citizens of any country.

A federal judge in Los Angeles on Tuesday ordered Apple to provide "reasonable technical assistance" to investigators seeking to read the data on an iPhone 5C that had been used by Rizwan Farook, who along with his wife, Tashfeen Malik, killed 14 people and wounded 22 others on Dec. 2 in San Bernardino, California.

Both were killed in a shootout with police. The Federal Bureau of Investigation has been investigating the couple's potential communications with Islamic State and other militant groups, and argued that it needs access to the iPhone to find out more.

White House spokesman Josh Earnest said the Department of Justice was asking Apple for access to just one device, a central part of the government's argument, which Apple CEO Tim Cook has said was "simply not true."

Representatives of several other tech companies

"They are not asking Apple to redesign its product or to create a new backdoor to one of their products."

Earnest told reporters

did not immediately respond to requests for comment on the ruling.

Most technology security experts, including many who have served in government, see technical efforts to provide government access to encrypted devices inevitably brings in law enforcement. The argument has been made on-and-off since the 1990s, when the government tried and failed to force tech companies to incorporate a special chip into their products for surveillance purposes.

"The government suggests this tool could only be used once, on one phone," Cook said in a statement on Tuesday. "But that's simply not true. Once created, the technique could be used over and over again, on any number of devices."

If the federal judge, Magistrate Sheri Pym, rejects Apple's arguments, the Cupertino, California-based company can appeal her order to the district court, and then up the chain to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco and ultimately the U.S. Supreme Court.

The 9th Circuit is known to be pro-privacy. "The government ultimately will have an uphill fight," said Robert Cattanach, a former Justice Department lawyer who advises companies on cyber security issues.

American Civil Liberties Union staff attorney Alex Abdo said the government's request risked a "dangerous" precedent. "The Constitution does not permit the government to force companies to hack into their customers' devices," he said.

Donald Trump, the front-runner for the Republican Party's nomination to run in the Nov. 8 election, said on Fox News Channel's "Fox & Friends" program that Apple's resistance to encryption stems from "ridiculous hysteria ... about privacy and the government."

US extremist groups surge in 2015, research group says

Extremist groups proliferated in the United States in 2015, a U.S. research group said on Wednesday, as ideologically driven violence and incendiary political rhetoric created fertile conditions for white supremacists and other fringe actors.

The Southern Poverty Law Center said the number of far-right "hate groups" grew to 892 in 2015 from 784 the year before, spurred by battles over the Confederate flag, gay marriage, immigration and Islamic terrorism.

The SPLC also reported an increase in armed citizen militias, to 998 in 2015 from 874 the year before, as antigovernment activists were energized by land-use clashes with the federal government in the West and fears the Obama administration may tighten gun laws.

On the other end of the political spectrum, black separatist groups advocating anti-Semitic views grew to 180 chapters last year, up from 113 in 2014, according to the SPLC. Unlike activists in the Black Lives Matter movement who have sought to reduce police violence, black separatist groups like Israel United in Christ have advocated anti-Semitic and anti-white views.

Not all extremist movements have flourished. Established neo-Nazi groups like the National Alliance and the Aryans Nations have been hobbled by financial woes and leadership battles, the SPLC said.

But the number of Ku Klux Klan chapters more than doubled to 190 from 72, the SPLC said, invigorated by more than 300 rallies after the state of South Carolina took down the Confederate battle flag from its capitol grounds in the wake of a June massacre of nine African-American churchgoers in Charleston. Number of victims in Maryland school sex abuse case rises to 17

The Prince George's County school board is facing a class-action lawsuit over the allegations.

The number of victims has risen to 17 in a Maryland child pornography case involving a volunteer teacher charged with filming sexually explicit videos in an elementary school restroom, police said on Wednesday.

Deonte Carraway, 22, was arrested this month and charged with directing videos involving at least 10 children during the school day at Judge Sylvania Woods Elementary School in Glenarden, a Washington suburb.

Prince George's County Police Department spokeswoman Julie Parker said on Twitter that 17 victims had been confirmed and that the investigation was continuing.

Police were notified after a father discovered pornographic images on his son's phone. They said about 40 videos have been found showing children rang-

Carraway faces 10 counts of child pornography, as well as charges of sexual abuse and sexual offense. He is being held on a $1 million bond.

Police have said the investigation is expected to last several months. The Federal Bureau of Investigation is involved.

Couple stakes claim to record Powerball jackpot

A Florida couple claimed their share of last month's record $1.6 billion Powerball lottery jackpot Wednesday, coming forward with the second of the three winning tickets.

David Kaltschmidt and Maureen Smith of Melbourne Beach revealed they held a winning ticket, worth $528.8 million, from the Jan. 13 drawing at the state's lottery headquarters in Tallahassee.

They posed for photos with an oversized check after opting to claim their share in a lump sum payment.

"It's still like a 'pinch me,'" said Kaltschmidt, 55. "It is just so overwhelming."

Kaltschmidt said he planned to retire from his job as a manufacturing engineer. Smith, 70, a homemaker, said her age was a factor in the decision to take the immediate payment.

The ticket was purchased at a Publix supermarket in Melbourne Beach on Florida's central east coast. The other winning tickets were sold in Tennessee and California.

Kaltschmidt and Smith called the decisions arising from their good fortune stressful and said they had told their family only within the past week. As for their spending plans, Kaltschmidt said he needed a new car and Smith wanted to get a massage.

"We are not going to go partying," she said.

A Tennessee couple with another of the winning tickets quickly came forward last month, announcing they would take their share in an immediate cash payment and planned to keep their jobs.

The third winning ticket was sold at a 7-Eleven store in Chino Hills, California, according to the state's lottery, and officials still are waiting for someone to come forward with it. REUTERS

Miley don't need no prenup

How good is Miley Cyrus feeling about her rekindled relationship with former — or is it current? — fiancé Liam Hemsworth?

So good that she's reportedly ready to walk down the aisle with him without bothering to sign a prenup first, according to Radar Online.

Her family, though, thought that would be a terrible idea and stepped in to get her to slow down. Way to show your anti-Australian bias, Cyrus family.

"Miley does not see what those around her see," a source says. "Miley's family and management team is not going to let her marry Liam without an ironclad prenup in place."

Now, you might be wondering why they'd be worried, since Hemsworth has all that "Hunger Games" cash stashed away, but apparently Cyrus is estimated to be worth nearly $200 million. OK, I can see why they might be worried.

Bachelor Jake responds to latest contestant death

With the news this week that a second contestant from Season 14 of "The Bachelor," Lex McAllister, had died from an apparent suicide, it was only a matter of time before that season's Bachelor, Jake Pavelka, broke his silence on the matter. "I'm so sad to hear about Alexa. Such a beautiful girl," he tweets. "My heart breaks for her family. Covering them in prayer during this rough time." McAllister was rushed to the hospital in Columbus, Ohio, on Saturday after ingesting "a lot" of pills and died Tuesday. In 2013, fellow contestant Gia Allemand died after hanging herself.

Joseph Fiennes goes to gladiator school

The actor is really happy that the Jesus in his new film "Risen" isn't Caucasian.

NED EHRBAR @Nedrick
ned.ehrbar@metro.us

Joseph Fiennes is apparently looking to court controversy these days. When he's not defending his decision to portray Michael Jackson in an upcoming British made-for-TV movie, he's discussing the religious and racial politics of his new film, "Risen," in which he stars as a Roman officer charged with investigating the death of Jesus Christ to prove he's not the messiah. Oh, and in the movie — for once — Jesus isn't a white guy.

This is basically two different movies in one, going from a procedural to a religious film. Certainly the appeal for me was taking a narrative that many of us know so well. I'm not giving anything away by saying it picks up kind of where Mel Gibson left off in that we start at the crucifixion, resurrection and ascension. Which is a pretty tall order to get into one movie. But what I loved was it takes the stigma off it being a Bible movie by giving our main protagonist the journey — and that main protagonist being a non-believer, being a Roman tribune who's there to put down these insurrections. The narrative being carried through the eyes of a nonbeliever is brilliant to me.

In "Risen," Joseph Fiennes plays a centurion who doubts the divinity of Jesus. ROSIE COLLINS

The steps of the investigation felt very methodical and detective-like. I took the opportunity to sit with a detective for a day because it was structured with these interrogations. So I tried to borrow — from a modern perspective — how you would interrogate, and it seemed to me it probably wouldn't have changed much. Just being threatening. [Laughs] Also, I went to gladiator school, which helped me in terms of precision and warfare and the way they fought.

What's the first day of gladiator school like? Bruises, bruises. I mean, I really was like, "Ow!"

Ow!" They're wonderful guys, but they're hardened alpha-males.

Is putting on a centurion uniform a rite of passage for British actors?

Yeah, it is. [Laughs] Look at that, six-packs instantaneously! I felt like such a loser at the end of the day taking it off. The other thing — not to digress or be too humorous — is how did the Roman army nearly take over a huge portion of the world in sandals? I mean, gladiator school was tough enough, but three months in sandals with no socks and no cushion was brutal.

You also have a non-white Jesus, which is still rare in film and TV.

I feel like nobody's really mentioned this. I mean, there's such a furor with the Oscars — and I'm not going to wade into any of that — but just in terms of casting, yes this is a big step forward just in terms of getting the casting right and moving away from the golden, blue-eyed boy and delivering the right type of casting. It's brilliant. I'm really proud of that.

Making a case for being picky

New York Times film critic A.O. Scott praises his profession in the book "Better Living Through Criticism."

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

A.O. Scott doesn't have a popular job. Since 2000, he's written about the arts, and mostly about movies, for The New York Times, graduating to chief film critic in 2004. His is a profession of sometimes savage opinions that often inspire savage opinions from others. Scott confronts many of the arguments against his trade in his first book, "Better Living Through Criticism: How to Think About Art, Pleasure, Beauty and Truth." Scott talks to us about the changing nature of his job and not wanting to rest on his laurels as a writer for a renowned publication.

BETTER LIVING
Through Criticism

How to Think About Art, Pleasure, Beauty, and Truth

A.O. SCOTT

New York Times film critic A.O. Scott's first book is "Better Living Through Criticism," now in bookstores. CARMEN HENNING

The other day you tweeted out a message from Tom Green congratulating you on the book, which gave you the opportunity to post your old positive review for his film "Freddy Got Fingered." You wrote one of the few nonhostile pieces about it. At the time even Tom Green was fairly shocked to have a positive review in The New York Times. They didn't use the quote in the ads. It wasn't the image they wanted to project. That review has stuck around, and people have maybe taken another look at the movie. Some have put on the DVD and turned it off after 10 minutes, because they're just appalled at what they see. Other people may think, "Oh, there's something going on here. This might be art."

A lot of pieces praising film criticism tend to be very defensive. This is more positive.

I didn't want to write a book that was just a defense of my job, that said I should be allowed to keep it and I'm very important. Some people might assume or think that's what the book is. But it's not about criticism as a profession, though there's certainly stuff that talks about its history and its future. It's more about criticism as an activity, as part of the larger cultural product of making and evaluating art and figuring out our place in the world. This book is not an instruction manual on how to do criticism. It's more like an encouragement to figure out how to do it.

This is a general question, but as someone who came to film criticism from book reviewing, what attracts you to writing about movies specifically?

One is the range of stuff you get to write about. When you write about books, you write 90 percent of the time about a narrow range of what's being published. The amazing thing about writing about movies is you take it all in. You write about big commercial movies, you write about genre movies, you write about kids' movies, you write about documentaries, you write about foreign-language films. Every week you get this extraordinary range to write about.

And the movies you see are about everything. Roger Ebert said that movies are about every aspect of human life. You get to say something about politics or sex or love or religion. I don't really know how to write about those things directly. I'm not a political pundit or a historian or a memoirist. But I can dabble in all those things as a film critic. It's not just that there's a great variety of movies, but every movie that's worth writing about contains within itself very complex and rich information and ideas about life.

The BowTie

Wonder what your pooch is up to all day? There's an app for that.

WonderWoof, a Bluetooth device shaped like a bow tie, attaches to a collar and tracks your pup's every move on the WonderWoof app.
Dog owners will know when their pet is running, sleeping, playing or dreaming.

Betsy Fore, 29, came up with the idea while in London. "It was all about my little fur baby," says Fore of her dog. "He was a little overweight [and] when I looked at the market there was nothing really out there for him."

When Fore put the first WonderWoof Bow-

Tie on her own pet — it was just a little black box back then — she saw positive results. "Over the course of time wearing it, he did begin to lose weight. And when he reached his goal weight, this increased his life up to two years," says Fore.

The product monitors a dog's health by taking into account the traits of 13,000 breeds, as well as the pet's age and size.
Its tracker and pedometer connect to the app, which charts the dog's activity. Pet and owner are rewarded with virtual "bones" when a goal is reached.

"Monitoring caloric intake will be in the next update," Fore says. "How much they eat is just as important as how much exercise they get."

The dream, according to Fore, is having the ability to alert pet owners to a pet's illness.
"That's what we're going to be working on," reports Fore. "The BowTie will tell you if your dog is sleeping too much or drinking too much and it'll send these alerts directly to the vet."

But what about your beloved feline? Won-derMeow was recently this past month and plans to launch for retail soon.

WonderMeow's goal is different from Wonder-Woof. "It's more about tracking your cats' secret lives," she explains.
"There's a little camera set up [and] you can set up your cat's personality."

The camera will take snapshots of where a cat is slinking off to during the day. Fore adds, "It's about them being the director of their own adventure."

WonderWoof is available for online purchase at WonderWoof.com for $95.

Authentic Malaysian cuisine comes to East Passyunk Avenue.

A.D. AMOROSI
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

It's not every day an international head of state claims your food is the best, most authentic fare he or she has had home or abroad.

Yet that's what happened two weeks ago when Awang Adek, Malaysian ambassador to the United States, visited Drexel University's Philadelphia Malaysian Night and sampled Chef Angelina Branca's saté, using skewers straight from the coconut palm frond.

"I was floored by the compliment," says Branca.

The ambassador's words were ringing endorsement considering the BYOB restaurant Branca owns with her husband John, Saté Kampar — named for the province in Malaysia she's from — would soon debut (it opened Feb. 10) and that she came to America in 2000, not as a chef, but as an international corporate strategist.

"I grew up with a family of chefs and restaurateurs," explains Branca.

"When I arrived and made acquaintances within Philly's Malaysian community, I cooked for them and tended to be the one who made the old traditional dishes that they couldn't get here."

It is that tradition — creating dishes in the manner they were once prepared at home — that makes Saté Kampar a sensation.

Encouraged by her husband John Branca, one-time co-owner of Philadelphia Rock Gym where the pair met, Branca began researching where to source the hard-to-find ingredients necessary for authentic rice topped with sambal (hot-pepper sauce), fried crisp anchovies, roasted peanuts and hard-boiled egg. There's a similar wrapped rice vermicelli, Mee Hoon Goreng Bungkus, that is spicier.

This tasty, tender mackerel is souffléed, fluffed and flavored with kaffir lime and steamed in a banana leaf.

Rendang Daging

Slow cooked for six hours, this sharable braised beef plate is done in a paste of coconut cream and mixed Malaysian spices.

Malaysian fare (e.g. spices imported from home, along with items from Florida).

"Malaysian lemongrass tastes radically different than any other lemongrass," she says.

In Saté Kampar, Malaysian street scenes are replicated along the stripped-to-brick walls with murals by Jared Bader (whose wife, Rashidah, is Malaysian) and a bar featuring Dwarf Coconut drinks and Teh O Ais Limau tea.

From the look to its slow-cooked and densely marinated flavors, Saté Kampar is as close to down-home Malaysian as you'll find in the U.S.

An AeroPress is maintaining Lake

"We're all very addicted to coffee."

RACHEL RACZKA
@rachelraczka
rachel.raczka@metro.us

Lake Street Dive's latest studio release "Side Pony" is due out Friday before they hit the road for a world tour. The Boston-bred four-piece band has been together for more than a decade, so we asked guitarist/trumpeter Mike "McDuck" Olson about how they've managed to keep it up.

We've always thought of you as a Boston band, but that's not the case anymore, is it?

The girls [Rachael Price and Bridget Kearney] live in Brooklyn, and then Mike [Calabrese] lives in Dudley [Square] and I'm the Jamaica Plain guy. We've found ourselves based in all different places over the years, but home base in some way has always been Boston.

What do you think being apart does for the band?

We end up using our time on the road more wisely. We divide our time between going to the places that we as individuals want to go to and then, as a band, working while on the road. When we're home, that's our weekend, but when we're on the road, we're rehearsing on the bus and in the venue every day.

Do you get much done while you're on the go?

I know I just said we're very productive while on the road, but writing isn't something we do often. You need a creative space that shuts off the world.

Any good luck charms you keep on the bus?

The AeroPress. That's a crucial Lake Street Dive talisman. I think those good vibes might not be so good if we didn't have it with us. We're all very addicted to coffee.

After more than a decade, Lake Street Dive is still kicking. BIG HASSLE

When did you as a band know you were onto something special? Even after 12 years, when you see someone [in the audience] singing along, you think, 'OK, you've succeeded in what you wanted to do. Your song is catchy and memorable.'

How should fans approach "Side Pony"? The order of songs [on an album] isn't arbitrary. We agonized over the order of these songs. It's sad in the era of Spotify, you lose the intended transitions, and you'll have fast songs into slow songs or two fast songs in two different keys. A record is a map, and you should go from the beginning to the end. We're proud of the way ["Side Pony"] tells a story, not necessarily with a narrative, but there are messages in there and we'll let people decide what they are. If it's out of order, something's lost.

ART

The Golden Age of King Midas

Thursday through Nov. 27
Penn Museum
3260 South St.
$5, Penn.museum
This exhibit explores the life and possessions of the real King Midas, an infamous Turkish ruler nearly 3,000 years old. Archaeologists from the Penn Museum discovered a tomb in 1957 believed to be that of King Midas' father. The artifacts found in that tomb weave a story of who King Midas really was, and how he designed his father's tomb.

The Legendary James Levine

Thursday through Feb. 20
Verizon Hall
300 S. Broad St.
From $65
Kimmelcenter.org
The Philadelphia Orchestra presents one of the most celebrated conductors of the day, James Levine, in his first performance with this orchestra in 20 years. He will begin the evening with Charles Ives' "Three Places in New England," followed by equally peaceful and pastoral selections of Brahms' "Serenade No. 2" and Saint-Saëns' "Symphony No. 3," played on Verizon Hall's organ.

5 Best US ski resorts for the whole family

Make taking the slopes a team effort.

Fodor's Travel

We've all heard that the family who plays together stays together. Even if a clan contains all types — from shredders to spa-lovers — the slopes can offer wintry entertainment for varying activities, skill levels and tastes. The following resorts across the country have a reputation for being especially kind to kin. Not only will kids of all ages find happiness at these spots, there's plenty for parents to enjoy, too.

Beaver Creek Resort

Where: Beaver Creek, Colorado
The promise of hot chocolate on the mountaintop in the morning and a warm chocolate chip cookie break each afternoon awaits at this picturesque resort. In addition to seemingly endless entertainment options from sleigh riding to shopping to a skating rink, Beaver Creek has been recognized by the National Ski Area Association with an award for overall safety.

Stowe Mountain Resort

Where: Stowe, Vermont
This New England ski area is home to one of the most well-known families in the world: the Von Trapps of "Sound of Music" fame settled in Stowe after they fled Europe. The family continues to run a lodge in town, the Trapp Family Lodge, where families can enjoy miles of cross-country skiing on property, along with activities such as baking classes and yoga. Mount Mansfield lies just minutes down the road. And the famous Ben & Jerry's factory offers tours, and tastings, in nearby Waterbury.

Northstar California Resort

Where: Lake Tahoe, California
The Tahoe Value Pass allows access to three resorts — Heavenly, Kirkwood and Northstar — so there's little risk of becoming bored in Tahoe. Families especially enjoy Northstar for its tubing hill, bungee trampoline, moonlight snowshoe tours and apres-ski activities such as "build-your-own-smores" cookouts right in the village at an outdoor fire pit.

Keystone Resort

Where: Keystone, Colorado
While the snow fort Kidtopia — with its tunnels and climbable exterior — will enchant the little ones, weekend fireworks, parades and mountain lightshows entertain any age at the snowy western respite of Keystone. Snow biking, snowcat tours and a horse-drawn wagon rides to dinner in a rustic cabin amp up the usual seasonal fun.

Deer Valley

Where: Park City, Utah
Who wouldn't be impressed by slopes where you can ski side-by-side with an Olympian? Live the dream at Deer Valley. Be sure to give Heidi Voelker, who will be on the premises all winter, a wave when she swishes by (or maybe ask her for tips). NASTAR onsite ski racing provides another great reason to rub elbows with the athletes.

For even more family-friendly and gorgeous ski resorts, including Big Sky Resort where skiers can watch dogs sledding and Taos Ski Valley, which boasts a state-of-the-art children's center, go to Fodor's.com.

Jury still out on Schenn's Flyers future

The flashy forward has made a strong case to remain in the Flyers' future plans with recent play.

ERIC GOLDSTEIN @EricSponda
sports@metro.us

The Flyers clearly showed they had no intention of bringing pending free agent Luke Schenn back next year. Rather than negotiate a contract extension with him, they traded the defenseman — along with Vinny Lecavalier — to the Kings in early January.

The jury is still out on his brother, though.

Brayden Schenn is a restricted free agent after this season, which means the Flyers can match any offer he receives from another team, sign him to a deal or let him walk. The 24-year-old, earning $2.75 million this year, is making the organization's decision a difficult one with his recent play.

Brayden Schenn has 17 goals and 17 assists in 54 games for the Flyers this season. GETTY IMAGES

With his go-ahead goal in the second period and an assist — his second of the night — on the game-winner on the power play late in the third during Tuesday's crucial 6-3 win over the Devils, Schenn now has eight goals and six assists in his last 17 games. The hot spell, which also includes seven goals in his last 12 games, oddly started when his brother left for L.A.

His 17 goals and eight power-play markers this season trail only Wayne Simmonds for the team lead in both categories. Plus, the fifth overall pick in the 2009 draft is also on pace to score a career-high 24 goals and surpass last year's career-high 47 points.

Much of his success is attributed to his stability on the same line. After jockeying between the first and second units last year under coach Craig Berube, first-year coach Dave Hakstol has found a home for Schenn as the right winger on the second line. He's played most of the season with center Sean Couturier, who has also blossomed this season.

However, with Couturier still out with a lower body injury and the team struggling to score goals, Hakstol juggled his lines against the Devils. He put Schenn on the left side with center Claude Giroux and right-winger Wayne Simmonds, which helped him produce his first three-point night since Jan. 5 and just the second time all season.

"I've played a lot with [Simmonds], but not recently," Schenn told reporters after the game. "I know what he's all about. He's a straight-line hockey player. He's going to win his battles and go in front of the net."

"He's really easy to play with and having an opportunity to play with him and Giroux, I just tried to make the most of it."

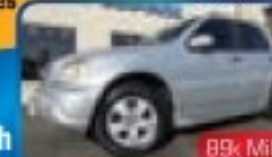

Schenn arrived in Philly in the Mike Richards deal in the summer of 2011. Whether or not he remains here beyond 2016 will likely depend on him continuing to make the most of his opportunities for the rest of the season.

Metro exclusive: 1-on-1 chat with

Would the Temple coach let his 11-year-old play football? Does he want a new stadium?

JON MARKS
@MetroPhilly
sports@metro.us

Temple's Matt Rhule recently had a chance to speak with Metro about the Owls' recent 10-4 season and what he intends to do to build on that.

The 41-year-old Rhule, named Tri-State Coach of the Year by the Maxwell Club, recently signed a six-year extension.

What are you doing these days with spring football still weeks away and the season seven months off? Do you ever take some time off?

"Unfortunately, this is kind of the life. I'm on my way to speak at a high school coaches' clinic at Penn State right now.

Not long after Temple's season ended in with a loss in the Marmot Boca Raton Bowl, Matt Rhule signed a six-year contract extension to stay in Philly. GETTY IMAGES

But this is the fun time of the year, where we can get these young guys ready. We get about eight hours a week where we can do some conditioning and movement stuff, plus a couple of hours of meetings. Teach 'em how to be tough. But we can't practice. I do relax. My wife and I go out a lot. My idea of fun is walking around city or going to see a movie. I'm probably a boring guy.

Now that you've had a chance to look back, after a 7-0 start, what went wrong at the end of the season when you lost four of your last seven? I don't think that way at all. I'm disappointed in the last two. I'm really disappointed we didn't play our best football, and trying to search for answers whether our approach was right or we were just tired. But only one team wins the championship game. I look at it like we were one of the best two teams in our league. We did things that hadn't been done here. But there's still steps we have to take.

How do you replace as many good players as you're losing? How quickly will it take for their replacements to adjust? It's a challenge for next year, having lost so many good players. That's why we look over the long haul for them to have some sustained consistency. It goes in steps.

Someone has to play as well as [Matt] Ioannidis and [Tyler] Matakevich and Tavon Young. That's the standard. It's not gonna be easy. One of our goals is we want our seniors to play their best ball in their senior year. We have a good group of seniors. If they can play their best football, we think we have a chance to have a really good team.

Temple's Rhule

What was recruiting like this season and how has it changed over the years?
I think this is our best class. I think we recruited on a different level in terms of who we were competing against. Our recruiting has changed. At first we were selling hope, selling promises; a vision. Now there's something more substantial to that. They can look at it and see the progress both from a recognition standpoint and as a team. We proved we can win and play at a high level. I think that's made a significant difference.

Why did you turn down an opportunity to possibly go to a bigger program, and how big an ego boost is it to be considered?
I try pretty hard not to be ego driven. It shows us we're doing the right things. Those people are professionals, and they're trying to build a winner,

I take it as a compliment to our entire program. The fact is, this is a place we believe where you can have long-term success and really have a great life. The questions you ask yourself are: Do I like where I work? Do I like where I live? Do I like the people I work with? Those answers are a resounding yes.

Does Temple need a new on-campus stadium?
I wouldn't say we need anything. We'll play in the street. But I do think if that decision is made it will not only be a great thing for our football program, but for football in the area and for the students on our campus. I'm obviously for it.

Do you want your 11-year-old son, Bryant, playing football?
I'm very cognizant of not forcing anything on my kid and not being a sports dad. If he wants to play football I'm 100 percent in favor of it. He's probably a little on the small side, which is why he hasn't wanted to play so far. But I didn't play until 7th grade, so if he wants to play I'll leave it up to him.

What's it like living in Center City now after being in the suburbs so long?

"We lived in Elkins Park for a long time, but we just kept having kids (Matt and Julie have a 2-year-old and 7-month-old) so we outgrew the house and had to move. One thing about the city, there's so many great places opening up. I'm always trying to find a new place. I like Dandelion, South Philly Taproom and a place near I live, South Gate Korean barbecue. But I'm very rarely recognized."

Aries Do what needs to be done without wasting your time trying to get others to take action. You will be far more effective if you work alone. Romance looks promising.

Taurus You'll have to put more energy behind your plans if you want to see them come to fruition. Use emotional tactics to motivate others to pitch in and help.

Gemini Be honest about what you can accomplish. If you don't set unrealistic goals, others will see your vision and help you reach it. Love is in the stars.

Cancer Mull over your experiences and make a mental note of what not to do in the future. You can spare yourself grief if you eliminate problems before they escalate.

Leo Gather information, travel or have a conversation that will help you get a better handle on your current status. Think carefully about how to move forward.

Virgo If you express your feelings, you will find out exactly where you stand. Once you have your position quantified, you will know how to speed things up.

Libra Get out with friends. Flirting and being playful with someone special will improve your relationship and help you come one step closer to positive changes.

Scorpio Participate. Don't be afraid to do things on your own, rather than waste time arguing with someone who doesn't want to contribute to your plans.

Sagittarius Connect with people who want to collaborate and share in your pursuits. New friendships will help you build a brighter future.

Capricorn You'll be reminded of someone or something from your past that can help you handle a challenge you face at home. Making an effort to be entertaining will be rewarded.

Aquarius Simplicity, precision and experimentation will help you achieve balance and success. Your enthusiasm will be infectious and will promote positive change.

Pisces Don't share your secrets. Focus on personal improvements and modify an old method of doing things with a trendy new twist. EUGENIA LAST
